2017 Larry Vandergrift Award for Best Graduate Paper

CALL FOR PAPERS

The Editors of the Canadian Modern Language Review invite submissions for the annual Larry Vandergrift Award for Best Graduate Paper. The competition is named in honour of the late Larry Vandergrift, a leading Canadian applied linguist and former editor of the CMLR. It is open to students who are currently registered or have graduated in the previous academic year.

Papers should present original, theoretically motivated research, with an analysis supported by a review of the relevant empirical literature. The topic of the paper must be related to second language teaching and learning. Graduate course papers, theses, and dissertations may be source material for the paper submitted. A note from the professor of the relevant course or the thesis/dissertation supervisor supporting the submission and briefly outlining the place/nature of the paper within the student's graduate studies program must also be included.

Papers will be evaluated by the CMLR Editors and members of the Editorial Board. The assessment criteria will include relevance to the mandate of the journal, originality and significance of research, currency of references, and quality of the writing.

Authors should refer to the Submission Guidelines in the CMLR when preparing their manuscripts. Previously submitted papers are not eligible.

Papers should be submitted no later than November 30, 2017.

The Best Paper will be published in Volume 74 of the CMLR and the author will receive a one-year subscription to the journal. The winning article may be selected for a double publication in the Canadian Modern Language Review as well as in Recherches et applications/Le français dans le Monde, CMLR's partner in the support of research and publishing of quality articles in French.

Manuscripts should be submitted online via ScholarOne:
